

There is no place like home!

There is no place as sweet as home. "Home sweet home" the saying goes. When we think of home, to some people it brings lovely memories, to some of them it brings wretched memories and to others it may give peace. We, middle-class people are not very rich, but at least have a shelter to stay. Think of people who are homeless, who sleep on the streets, eat whatever is available. Their life is miserable. Don't you think you're in a better condition than them?

Surely you are. A home brings togetherness, affection and care for the family. It is a place where the family celebrates, quarrels, expresses and shares their thoughts with the others. It happens that we miss home, when we far away. However far we go, we want to return to the place where we are from, where we feel relaxed. And that is, our very own HOME. A house was created only to stay, but we humans have made it one of the most important and basic necessities of life.

As for me, a home is not about how lavish or middle class it is, it is about how strong it makes the bonds of the family.

The architects all over the world have built so many buildings, monuments, towers, temples etc. such as The Twin Towers, The Great Wall of China, Burj Khalifa, The Statue of Liberty, Rio de Janeiro etc. Instead of building these structures if they had thought about building flats or towers for people who are homeless, it would be a great obligation for all of us.

Coming to population around the world, I should say people are living under the impression that there is no land or area to build houses for people to stay. But in reality, it is not so. So, what happens is, people have developed cities in education, technology as well as sports. And the populace staying in the rural area, travel to these cities for higher education or their particular career reasons. The land where these people have come from has lots of vast land to be developed. If we develop these areas and build houses for them to stay in, there will be no problem of houses. The populace will receive proper education they rightful of. They will get houses to stay. A place where they can celebrate, cry, argue, quarrel and express their thoughts with the others.

Everyone loves their respective home. Why not give this comforting feeling to others?
